Exploring Human Genetics

Genetics is the study of how traits are passed from parents to offspring. In this lab, you will explore the inheritance of a specific trait and use statistical analysis to determine if the observed results match the expected results.

Procedure:

1. Identify a trait that is controlled by a single gene with two alleles (dominant and recessive).

2. Perform a monohybrid cross between two heterozygous individuals (P generation).

3. Record the phenotypes of the offspring (F₁ generation).

4. Calculate the expected phenotypic ratio (3:1) and compare it to the observed ratio.

5. Perform a chi-square analysis to determine if the observed results are significantly different from the expected results.

Generation	Phenotype	Number of Offspring	Expected Ratio
P	Heterozygous	1	1
P	Heterozygous	1	1
F ₁	Dominant	3	3
F ₁	Recessive	1	1

Expected Results:

The expected phenotypic ratio for a monohybrid cross is 3:1 (dominant:recessive).

Chi-Square Analysis:

Use the chi-square test to determine if the observed results are significantly different from the expected results. The formula for chi-square is:

$$\chi^2 = \sum \frac{(O - E)^2}{E}$$

where O is the observed number and E is the expected number.

Compare the calculated chi-square value to the critical value from the chi-square distribution table. If the calculated value is greater than the critical value, the observed results are significantly different from the expected results.

Collect data and complete
chi square analysis
