Normative decision theory is concerned with how the rationality ideal prescribes the process of decision-making by providing a model of how we should rationally make decisions.

How do Normative Decision Theories justify their claims?

1. Foundational axioms describe our basic intuitions about how we should rationally make decisions.
 - attempting to formalize a language precisely & justify it
2. From a normative foundation, we can derive specific or normative principles and compare them with the human world.
3. Normative principles can be extended to other domains to see whether they hold there. Different normative theories have different domains of application, which are different from the human world.
4. Normative theories can be tested against the data from other real-world settings to provide a useful understanding of human decision-making patterns.
