

INTRODUCTION TO ASPEN PLUS SIMULATION

What is Process Simulation/Analysis?

The purpose of process simulation is to model and predict the performance of a process. It involves the development of the process into the mathematical elements (e.g. units) and subsequent study of performance. The process identification is e.g. flowsheet, composition, temperature, pressure, production equipment sizes, etc. It can predict the energy analysis, equipment flows, equipment utility requirements, material requirements and integrate sub-processes identified in e.g. ASPEN Plus. In addition, process analysis can provide the cost of production, energy to provide and related performance. Therefore, in process simulation, we use given the process flowsheet and description and we calculate the steady process output (Fig. 1). The tool will derive an ASPEN Plus. It is a computer-aided software which uses the underlying physical relationships (e.g., material and energy balances, thermodynamic properties, etc.) together to predict process performance (e.g., stream properties, operating conditions, and requirements).

Fig. 1. Process Simulation Problem

There are several advantages of computer-aided simulation:

- Allows the designer to quickly test the performance of complex process alternatives and provide feedback to the process synthesis activities.
- Can be incorporated with process synthesis to finding optimum integrated design.
- Minimizes experimental and scale-up efforts.
- Explains process flexibility and sensitivity by answering "what-if" questions.
- Quantitatively predicts the process and design requirements process performance.

Expensive errors in conventional design involving use the existing model of computer-aided simulation:

- Excessive complexity over the simplified RST simulation model.
- The conventional model generally as good as the design model given the simulation.
- But ASPEN simulation provides that the simulated model under physical process conditions give with the RST the ability to understand, measure value of the model of great value.
