

INTRODUCTION TO ASPEN PLUS SIMULATION

What is Process Simulation/Analysis?

The purpose of process simulation is to model and predict the performance of a process. It involves the development of the process into the mathematical elements (e.g. units) and subsequent study of performance. The process identification is e.g. flowsheet, instrumentation, composition, process operation, equipment sizes, etc. It can be carried out using analysis techniques (flow simulation, steady state simulation) or fully integrated simulation and optimisation software (e.g. ASPEN Plus). In addition, process analysis may involve the use of experimental data to predict and validate performance. Therefore, in process simulation, we use given the process flowsheet and description and specified input process variables (Fig. 1). The software then can ASPEN Plus. It is a comprehensive software which uses the underlying physical relationships (e.g., material and energy balances, thermodynamic properties, rate equations to predict process performance (e.g., stream properties, operating conditions, and equipment sizes).

Fig. 1. Process Simulation Problem

There are several advantages of computer-aided simulation:

- Allows the designer to quickly test the performance of complex process alternatives and provide feedback to the process synthesis activities.
- Can be incorporated with process synthesis to finding optimum integrated designs.
- Minimises experimental and scale-up efforts.
- Explains process flexibility and sensitivity by answering "what-if" questions.
- Quantitatively predicts the process and plant design/operating performance.

Despite these advantages, there are some limitations involving use of the existing world of computer-aided simulation:

- It is hard to quickly test the strength of R&D ideas/alternatives.
- The computational power available on personal computers (PCs) gives the limitation.
- Not all R&D activities provide data that simulated models require physical process information (e.g. unit design etc.) with its inherent inherent value of the quality of process.
