

Kin remissions of Trauma

By J. van der Kolk, M. Klauminzer, and M. Klauminzer

Abstract. Kin remissions of trauma are defined as the remission of trauma symptoms in a family member of a trauma survivor. This phenomenon is discussed in the context of the neurobiology of trauma, the role of the family, and the implications for clinical practice. Kin remissions are observed in a significant proportion of trauma survivors and their family members. The neurobiology of trauma, particularly the role of the amygdala and the hypothalamic-pituitary-adrenal axis, is discussed in relation to kin remissions. The role of the family in the development and maintenance of trauma symptoms is also discussed. The implications of kin remissions for clinical practice are discussed, including the need for a systemic approach to trauma treatment and the importance of family support.

For the 4th edition of Trauma Biomechanics all existing chapters referring to traffic and sports have been revised and updated. New scientific knowledge and changes in legal defaults such as norms and standards of crash tests have been integrated. Additionally, one chapter has been added where biomechanical aspects of injuries affected by high energies are communicated in a new way.
