

Human Genetics Lab

Exploring Human Genetics

For this lab, you will be working with a simulated population of 100 individuals. The population is divided into two groups: 50 males and 50 females. Each individual is represented by a set of chromosomes. The chromosomes are color-coded to represent different alleles. The alleles are: A (red), a (blue), B (green), and b (yellow).

Procedure:

1. Randomly select 50 males and 50 females from the population.
2. Determine the genotype of each individual by examining their chromosomes.
3. Record the genotype of each individual in the table below.
4. Calculate the frequency of each allele in the population.
5. Calculate the expected frequency of each genotype under Hardy-Weinberg equilibrium.
6. Perform a chi-square analysis to determine if the population is in Hardy-Weinberg equilibrium.

Sex	Genotype	Allele Frequency
Male	AA
Female	BB

Expected Genotype Frequencies:

Male: AA = p^2 , Aa = $2pq$, aa = q^2

Female: BB = r^2 , Bb = $2rs$, bb = s^2

Allele Frequencies:

Male: A = p , a = q

Female: B = r , b = s

Chi-Square Analysis:

Calculate the chi-square value for each genotype and sum them to get the total chi-square value. Compare this value to the critical value for the degrees of freedom (df) and the significance level (alpha).

df = (Number of genotypes) - 1

Alpha = 0.05

If the calculated chi-square value is greater than the critical value, the population is not in Hardy-Weinberg equilibrium. If the calculated chi-square value is less than the critical value, the population is in Hardy-Weinberg equilibrium.

Collect data and complete chi square analysis
