

Chapter 1 Section 2 Notes

The scientific method is a systematic process that is used to investigate natural phenomena. It involves making observations, asking questions, forming hypotheses, testing hypotheses, and drawing conclusions.

Primary and Secondary Sources

Information can come from two sources: primary sources and secondary sources. Primary sources are original information that is collected directly from the source.

They are written or recorded by the people who lived at a particular moment in time. Primary sources can include diaries, letters, photographs, and other documents that were created at the time of the event.

Secondary sources are information that is gathered from primary sources. They are created by someone who is not the original source of the information. Examples of secondary sources include textbooks, encyclopedias, and news articles.

Secondary sources are useful because they provide a different perspective on the same event. They can also provide more context and detail than primary sources.

Researchers use both primary and secondary sources to gather information. Primary sources are used to gather information directly from the source, while secondary sources are used to gather information from other sources.

Primary Sources

Primary sources are a first-hand account of an event or experience. They are created by someone who was directly involved in the event or who witnessed it. Examples of primary sources include diaries, letters, photographs, and other documents that were created at the time of the event.

Secondary Sources

Secondary sources are information that is gathered from primary sources. They are created by someone who is not the original source of the information.
