

The Digestive System

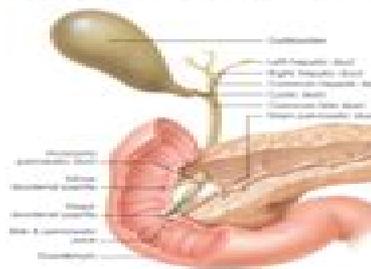

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a complex of organs in which foods, beverages, and other nutrients are broken down into smaller molecules that can be absorbed into the bloodstream. The process begins in the mouth, where food is chewed and mixed with saliva. The resulting bolus is then swallowed and moves down the esophagus into the stomach. In the stomach, food is further broken down and mixed with gastric juices. The resulting chyme then moves into the small intestine, where most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients occurs. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The duodenum is the first part of the small intestine and is where most of the digestion of food occurs. The jejunum is the middle part of the small intestine and is where most of the absorption of nutrients occurs. The ileum is the last part of the small intestine and is where most of the absorption of vitamins and minerals occurs. The large intestine is the final part of the digestive system and is where most of the water and electrolyte absorption occurs. The large intestine is divided into three parts: the cecum, the colon, and the rectum. The cecum is the first part of the large intestine and is where most of the fermentation of food occurs. The colon is the middle part of the large intestine and is where most of the absorption of water and electrolytes occurs. The rectum is the last part of the large intestine and is where most of the storage of feces occurs. The rectum is divided into three parts: the sigmoid colon, the rectum, and the anal canal. The sigmoid colon is the first part of the rectum and is where most of the storage of feces occurs. The rectum is the middle part of the rectum and is where most of the absorption of water and electrolytes occurs. The anal canal is the last part of the rectum and is where most of the elimination of feces occurs.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

The liver, pancreas, and gallbladder are accessory organs of the digestive system. The liver is the largest organ in the body and is located in the upper right quadrant of the abdomen. It is responsible for producing bile, which is used to emulsify fats in the small intestine. The pancreas is a small, elongated organ located behind the stomach. It is responsible for producing pancreatic juice, which is used to digest proteins, carbohydrates, and fats. The gallbladder is a small, pear-shaped organ located below the liver. It stores bile and releases it into the small intestine when needed.

Layers of large intestine

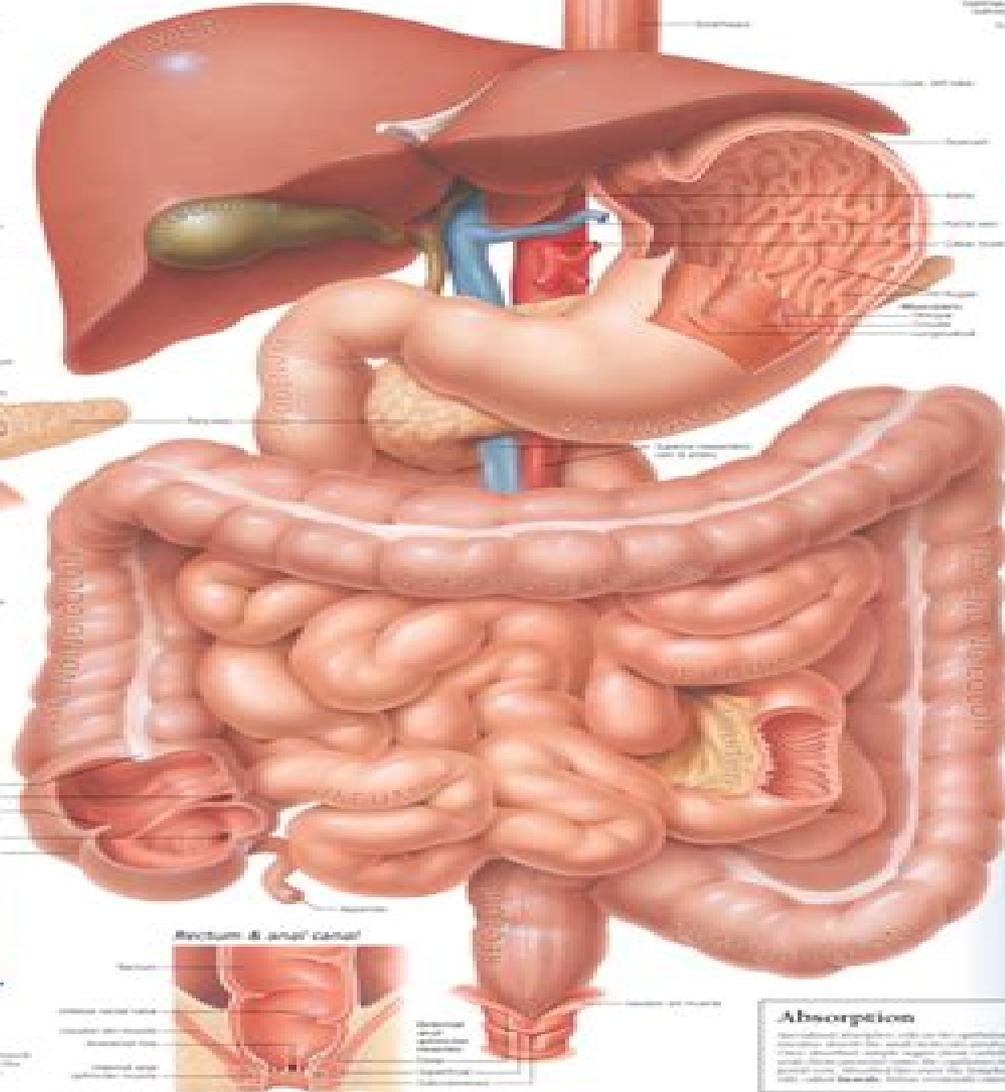

Large intestine

The large intestine is the final part of the digestive system. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter. The large intestine is divided into three parts: the cecum, the colon, and the rectum. The cecum is the first part of the large intestine and is where most of the fermentation of food occurs. The colon is the middle part of the large intestine and is where most of the absorption of water and electrolytes occurs. The rectum is the last part of the large intestine and is where most of the storage of feces occurs.

Peristaltic action

Peristaltic action is the process by which the digestive system moves food through the gastrointestinal tract. It is a series of involuntary, rhythmic muscle contractions that push food forward. The process begins in the mouth, where food is chewed and mixed with saliva. The resulting bolus is then swallowed and moves down the esophagus into the stomach. In the stomach, food is further broken down and mixed with gastric juices. The resulting chyme then moves into the small intestine, where most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients occurs. The large intestine is the final part of the digestive system and is where most of the water and electrolyte absorption occurs. The large intestine is divided into three parts: the cecum, the colon, and the rectum. The cecum is the first part of the large intestine and is where most of the fermentation of food occurs. The colon is the middle part of the large intestine and is where most of the absorption of water and electrolytes occurs. The rectum is the last part of the large intestine and is where most of the storage of feces occurs.

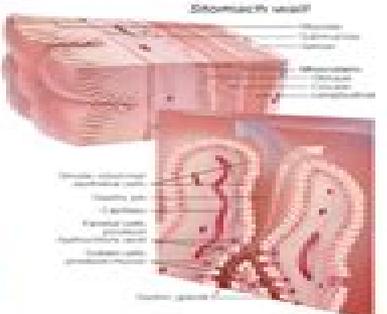

The mouth & salivary glands

The mouth is the starting point of the digestive system. It is where food is chewed and mixed with saliva. The resulting bolus is then swallowed and moves down the esophagus into the stomach. In the stomach, food is further broken down and mixed with gastric juices. The resulting chyme then moves into the small intestine, where most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients occurs. The large intestine is the final part of the digestive system and is where most of the water and electrolyte absorption occurs. The large intestine is divided into three parts: the cecum, the colon, and the rectum. The cecum is the first part of the large intestine and is where most of the fermentation of food occurs. The colon is the middle part of the large intestine and is where most of the absorption of water and electrolytes occurs. The rectum is the last part of the large intestine and is where most of the storage of feces occurs.

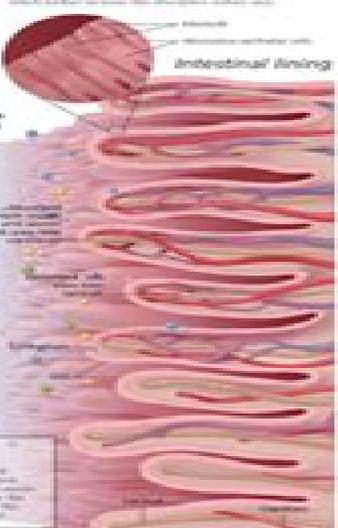

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ located in the upper left quadrant of the abdomen. It is responsible for breaking down food into smaller pieces and mixing it with gastric juices. The resulting chyme then moves into the small intestine, where most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients occurs. The large intestine is the final part of the digestive system and is where most of the water and electrolyte absorption occurs. The large intestine is divided into three parts: the cecum, the colon, and the rectum. The cecum is the first part of the large intestine and is where most of the fermentation of food occurs. The colon is the middle part of the large intestine and is where most of the absorption of water and electrolytes occurs. The rectum is the last part of the large intestine and is where most of the storage of feces occurs.

Small intestine

The small intestine is the longest part of the digestive system. It is responsible for most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The duodenum is the first part of the small intestine and is where most of the digestion of food occurs. The jejunum is the middle part of the small intestine and is where most of the absorption of nutrients occurs. The ileum is the last part of the small intestine and is where most of the absorption of vitamins and minerals occurs.

Absorption

Absorption is the process by which nutrients are taken up by the body. It occurs in the small intestine, where most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients occurs. The large intestine is the final part of the digestive system and is where most of the water and electrolyte absorption occurs. The large intestine is divided into three parts: the cecum, the colon, and the rectum. The cecum is the first part of the large intestine and is where most of the fermentation of food occurs. The colon is the middle part of the large intestine and is where most of the absorption of water and electrolytes occurs. The rectum is the last part of the large intestine and is where most of the storage of feces occurs.
