"The Temperamental Problem Laid on the Altar"

By David Mervin Long

This passage in Lafayette's text is important because in the American Revolutionary War, there were specifically references to 1776 and occurred at age 23. Lafayette was left with a great internationalist outlook. He only 20 years old, but possessed great ability, following on the knowledge of his family's progressive military history. Two years later, he supported his uncle and his own friends supporting emerging France's new government in America, in relation to the King.

Over time, Lafayette's uncle and his family were in France to witness Lafayette's war with France. During a stay in Paris, he learned of the American soldiers' needs against the British. He began to attend and participate in meetings for political (philosophical) matters, with other intellectuals who sympathized with the colonies and their quest for independence. He was also exposed to the French Revolution, which was a great event. He was about the time of revolution and setting up a Republic.

In these meetings, European intellectuals, scientists and philosophers discussed the rights of man, the abolition of slavery, and the principles of the American movement, emphasizing the importance of equality and liberty. These principles were heavily influenced by the Enlightenment's progressivism, which was a new understanding of the American Revolution that Enlightenment thinkers viewed as a new philosophy and revolution. They challenged ideas related to tradition and religion, such as superstitions, authoritarianism, and privilege. Instead, they suggested religion through individual study and practical methods. Among their philosophies was the idea that citizens should be provided equality and individual freedoms.

In America, France was a democracy, which means a larger government/country.
