The Delphi Technique Gene Rowe, George Wright, Fergus M. I. Bolger, 2011 This paper examines the Delphi technique critically to determine whether it succeeds in alleviating the process loss typical of interacting groups After briefly reviewing the technique we go on to consider problems with Delphi from two perspectives First we examine methodological and technical difficulties and the problems these have brought about in experimental applications We suggest that important differences exist between the typical laboratory Delphi and the original concept of Delphi These differences reflecting a lack of control of important group characteristics factors such as the relative level of panellist expertise make comparisons between Delphi studies unrealistic as are generalizations from laboratory studies to the ideal of Delphi This conclusion diminishes the power of those former Delphi critiques which have largely dismissed the procedure because of the variability of laboratory study results e g Sackman 45 Second having noted the limited usefulness of the majority of studies for answering questions on the effectiveness of Delphi we go on to look at the technique from a theoretical mechanical perspective That is by drawing upon ideas findings from other areas of research e g Hogarth 27 we attempt to discern whether the structure of the Delphi procedure itself might reasonably be expected to function as intended We conclude that inadequacies in the nature of feedback typically supplied in applications of Delphi tend to ensure that any small gains in the resolution of process loss are offset by the removal of any opportunity for group process gain Some solutions to this dilemma are advocated which are based on an analysis of the process of judgment change within groups and a consideration of factors which increase the validity of statistical nominal groups over their constituent individual components remarks and points Round Two exposed the framework s main body to the feedback from the panel Round Two analysis then adapted the panelist s comments and points on the main body and made the suggested changes Delphi method for evaluating scientific research proposals in a neutrosophic environment Florentin Smarandache, Jesús Estupiñán Ricardo, Erick González Caballero, Maikel Yelandi Leyva Vázquez, Noel Batista Hernández, The scientific research proposal is part of the task to be carried out in academic and research institutions around the world This is a complex decision making problem because decision makers must determine the projects that are appropriate to the subjects addressed by the institution those projects must be achievable within a reasonable deadline they must have the financial means and the budget necessary to be carried out the staff must be sufficiently qualified and an optimum number of personnel must be available to succeed the tasks and not interfere with other research projects
