

ACCOUNTING 1

Accounting Basics

Accounting is the process of recording, summarizing, and reporting in terms of money the financial transactions and events that in whole or in part affect the financial position, performance, and operations of an organization and the interpretation of the resulting information.

The primary purpose of accounting is to provide information that is useful in making economic decisions. This information is used by a wide variety of users, including management, investors, creditors, and the general public.

Accounting is a systematic process of identifying, measuring, and communicating economic information in terms that permit informed judgment and decision-making by the users of the information.

The accounting process involves the following steps:

1. Identifying the transactions and events that are significant to the organization.
2. Measuring the transactions and events in terms of the organization's reporting currency.
3. Recording the transactions and events in a systematic and chronological order.
4. Summarizing the recorded information into financial statements.
5. Interpreting the financial statements for the users of the information.

Accounting is a language of business. It provides a common language for the communication of financial information.

The accounting process is a continuous cycle. It begins with the identification of transactions and events, and it ends with the interpretation of the financial statements. The cycle then repeats itself for the next period.

Accounting is a vital part of any business. It provides the information that is needed to make informed decisions about the future of the organization.
