

Costal Engineering

Costal Engineering is a branch of civil engineering that deals with the design and construction of structures and systems that are exposed to the coastal environment. This includes the design of coastal defense structures, such as sea walls, dunes, and levees, as well as the design of coastal infrastructure, such as roads, bridges, and buildings. The field also encompasses the study of coastal erosion and the impact of sea level rise on coastal communities.

The coastal environment is a complex and dynamic system, and coastal engineering must take into account a wide range of factors, including wave action, storm surges, and sediment transport. Coastal engineers use a variety of tools and techniques, including computer modeling, field measurements, and physical models, to study and design coastal structures and systems. The field is a rapidly growing and interdisciplinary area of research and practice, and it plays a critical role in protecting coastal communities and infrastructure from the impacts of the ocean.
