

Costal Engineering

Costal Engineering is a branch of civil engineering that deals with the design and construction of structures and systems that are exposed to the coastal environment. This includes the design of coastal defense structures, such as sea walls, dunes, and levees, as well as the design of coastal infrastructure, such as roads, bridges, and buildings. The field also encompasses the study of coastal erosion and the impact of sea level rise on coastal communities.

The coastal environment is a complex and dynamic system, and the design of coastal structures must take into account a wide range of factors, including wave action, storm surges, and sediment transport. Coastal engineering is a multidisciplinary field that draws on knowledge from civil engineering, geotechnical engineering, and environmental engineering. The design of coastal structures must also take into account the social and economic impacts of coastal erosion and sea level rise.

Coastal engineering is a rapidly growing field, and the demand for coastal engineers is increasing. As sea level rise continues to accelerate, coastal communities are facing increasing threats from coastal erosion and flooding. Coastal engineers are needed to design and construct structures that can protect these communities from the impacts of sea level rise.
