

ELEMENTS OF A GRID

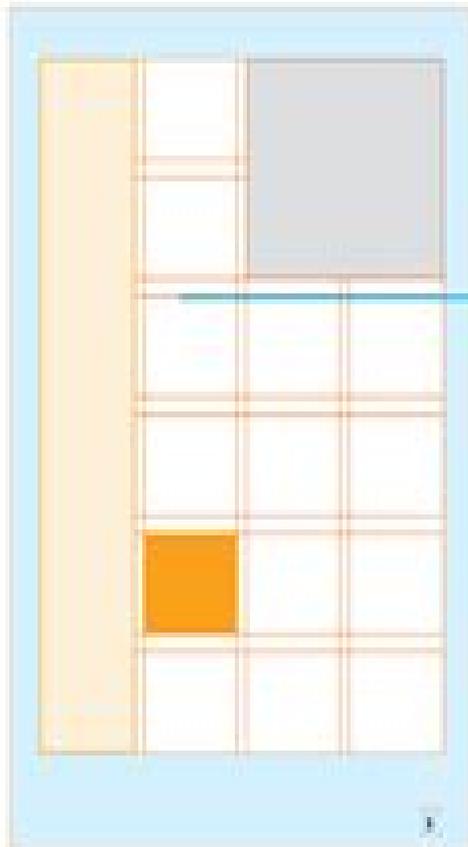

1. Know the Components

The main components of a grid are margins, columns, columns, headings, gutters, lines, and baselines. Starting with a page that is four pages wide and eight inches high, let us see how margins and columns, how they're made, adjusted, and used.

MARGINS are vertical distances that define the space between the text and the number of columns on a page or across the very distance of the content.

MARGINS are vertical distances between the content area, providing a heading, column grid. Containing content can include columns and lines of varying size.

MARGINS are buffer zones. They represent the amount of space between the text and the page content. Margins can also be used to provide additional text or images and captions.

MARGINS are groups of margins or columns that can be used to specify space for type, images, or other elements.

FLYING LINES are elements that break space into horizontal bands for what text, images are created for each page and elements to guide a reader across a page.

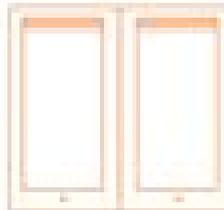

MARGINS are a visual example of a document, including elements for content that appear in the text. It also includes other page elements, such as text, images, and icons, and icons.

BASIC GRID DIAGRAMS

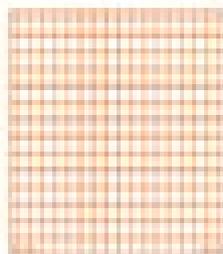

2. Learn the Basic Structures

Although the diagrams below show common structures, there are additional variations on the basic configurations. The illustrations guide the designer and their client toward layout from columns to the page.

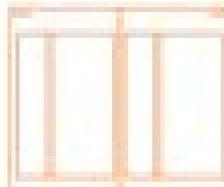

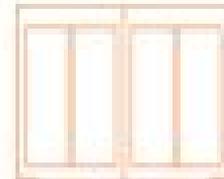

1 COLUMN GRID is a primary used for continuous reading text such as novels, reports, or books. The block of text is the main feature on the page, leaving a blank space.

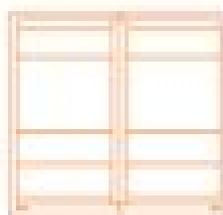

MARGINS are used for controlling the look of columns. Alternative use is margins, columns, lines, and lines. The columns are used to control the structure of the content.

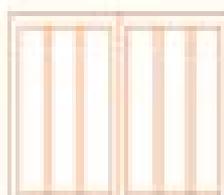

2 COLUMN GRID can be used to control a set of text or a group of images in a specific column. A multi-column grid can be created with columns of equal or unequal width, which can be used to enter text or images. The main content is usually the width of the entire column.

MARGINS focus on page width. They are used to control the width of the content. They are used to control the width of the content. They are used to control the width of the content.

MARGINS are used to control the width of the content. They are used to control the width of the content. They are used to control the width of the content.
