Abstract

Self-esteem has been conceptualized as an outcome, motive, and buffer, but there is no overall theory of self-esteem. In this article it is suggested that identity theory can provide a theoretical framework for the integration of the various conceptualizations of self-esteem. We suggest that self-esteem is an outcome of, and necessary ingredient in, the self-verification process that occurs within groups, maintaining both the individual and the group. Verification of role identities increases an individual's worth-based and efficacy-based self-esteem. The self-esteem built up by self-verification buffers the negative emotions that occur when self-verification is problematic, thus allowing continued interaction and continuity in structural arrangements during periods of disruption and change. Last, a desire for self-esteem, produced in part through self-verification, stabilizes the group because it motivates individuals to form and maintain relationships that verify identities.

Self-esteem continues to be one of the most commonly researched concepts in social psychology (Baumeister 1993; Mruk 1995; Wells & Marwell 1976; Wylie 1979). Generally conceptualized as a part of the self-concept, to some self-esteem is one of the most important parts of the self-concept. Indeed, for a period of time, so much attention was given to self-esteem that it seemed to be synonymous with self-concept in literature on the self (Rosenberg 1976, 1979). This focus on self-esteem has largely been due to the association of high self-esteem with a number

A Theory Of Self Esteem:

Extending Self-Esteem Theory and Research Timothy J. Owens, Sheldon Stryker, Norman Goodman, 2006-11-02 Self esteem is an academic and popular phenomenon vigorously researched and debated sometimes imbued with magical qualities other times vilified as the bane of the West's preoccupation with self Though thousands of articles have been devoted to the topic and bookshops work to feed the public's appetite for advice on revealing enhancing and maintaining self esteem conflicting claims and findings have placed the field in disarray In a very real sense self esteem is a victim of its own popularity This book seeks to add clarity to a concept earlier examined by such notable self theorists as Morris Rosenberg but eminently worthy of re examination and extension We do this by asking some leading thinkers on self esteem theory measurement and application to assess what we know about self esteem and link it to important aspects of society and the human experience

The Social Dynamics of Self-Esteem R A. Steffenhagen, Jeff D. Burns, 1987-10-05 The Social Dynamics of Self Esteem introduces a unique synthesis of the theoretical views posited by Alfred Adler Karl Marx Georg Simmel and Edmond Husserl in the development of a coherent theory of self esteem Grounded in the humanistic tradition of Adler self esteem theory redefines the concepts of personality as a function of both psychological and social parameters The authors identify 18 facets of self esteem at three levels of ego and develop three self esteem inventories to measure each ego level They also advance a new socio psychological theory of deviance and develop a conflict theory of personality This text will prove to be an indispensable handbook for professionals in psychology psychiatry social work counselling and pastoral therapy
