

Key Differences Between RPA and AI

Robotic process automation (RPA) and artificial intelligence (AI) are two of the most discussed technologies in business today stated Bahaa Al Zubaidi. Although both can be used to automate the tasks that revolve around a business, the way in which each operates significantly differs from the other. Distinguishing the fundamental differences between RPA and AI workflows is necessary in deciding where each can be applied to maximum effect.

What is RPA?

RPA tools are designed to perform a repetitive, rule-based task that was initially performed by humans. Some common examples include:

- Data transfer between various systems
- Data entry into forms
- Automating invoice processing
- Web scraping and data extraction

The RPA software is built to imitate manual steps that are required to execute repetitive tasks. It does this by interacting at the level of the user interface of other software applications in precisely the same way as a human would do. The RPA bots can log into systems, input data, move files, fill in forms, and run workflows.

Key Attributes of RPA

- Mimics human interaction with software systems
- Processes dependent on pre-defined rules and logic
- Most suitable for tasks that are higher in volume and repetitive
- Configuration insufficient in need of extreme technical skills
- Works with/within current IT infrastructure/ubiquitous software

What is AI?

AI refers to software technologies that make predictions, recommendations, or decisions by analyzing data. There are two main types of AI:

Narrow AI: Also called weak AI, focuses on singular tasks like speech recognition, image analysis, generating natural language, etc. Chatbots and digital assistants are examples of narrow AI.

General AI: Also known as artificial general intelligence (AGI), can theoretically perform intellectual tasks across multiple domains just like a human. True AGI does not yet exist.

Within these categories, some common AI techniques include:

- Machine learning algorithms identify patterns in data to build prediction models without explicit programming.
