architect client relationships their history their problems and how they have contributed to the discipline over time Explicitly a focus of the conversation is a number of projects that OMA has developed or completed with Prada a large number of which are installation scale environments that manifest in the form of runway shows and exhibitions The challenge of such projects is to retain a commitment to the political and cultural agenda that OMA embeds in the larger and permanent buildings Given the ephemerality and role of these environments as literal backgrounds to highlighted events the projects are ideal scenarios in which to develop an architecture that lacks the permanence of buildings while still carrying potency and contributing to larger cultural discussions involving for example event place concept product staging the crowd lighting and materiality Source Books in Architecture No 14 contains project documentation from the OMA and Prada archives transcripts from Koolhaas conversations with students at the Knowlton School at The Ohio State University and commentary and critique from architects critics and theorists
