GSM on Board Aircraft Carlos Gonzaga López, Ari Rantala, Sílvia Ruiz Boqué, Escola Politècnica Superior de Castelldefels, 2008 For several years the aircraft industry has been looking for a technology to provide at a reasonable cost a phone service onboard aircraft Nevertheless some technical hitches make successful calls via the terrestrial Global System for Mobile Communications GSM network impossible The mobiles unable to make reliable contact with ground based base stations would transmit with maximum RF power and these RF fields could potentially cause interference with the aircraft communications systems On the other hand the high speed of the aircraft causes frequent handover from cell to cell and in extreme cases could even cause degradation of terrestrial services due to the large amount of control signalling required in managing these handovers In order to avoid these problems and allow airline passengers to use their own mobile terminals during certain stages of flight a novel approach called GSM On Board GSMOB was suggested in 2005 The GSMOB system consists on a lowpower base station carried on board the aircraft itself and an associated unit emitting radio noise in the GSM band raising the noise floor above the signal level originated by ground base stations Thus mobiles activated at cruising altitude do not see any terrestrial network signal but only the aircraft originated cell This way the power level needed is low which reduces the interference with aircraft systems This thesis provides a general overview on GSMOB system which is nowadays being offered commercially by several relevant European airlines Moreover other aspects beyond the purely technical such as operational and regulatory issues have been addressed Military Review, 1996 Professional Journal of the United States Army, 1996 Aeronautical Radio Communication Systems and Networks Dale Stacey, 2008-04-15 Typically there are over twenty radio systems on board the average commercial jet aircraft dealing with communication navigation and surveillance functions Very high frequency VHF air to ground communication is usually the main method of information and control exchange between pilot and air traffic control Satellite and high frequency radio links are used to complement this system for long range or oceanic information exchanges Other communications systems are required between the airline operation centre and the pilot and sometimes between the passengers and the ground A comprehensive guide to current systems networks and topologies this book covers application requirements for communication and related radio navigation and surveillance functions in aeronautical systems There is also an insight into future possibilities as technologies progress and airspace operation and control scenarios change Ideal for civil aviation authorities airspace management providers and regulatory organizations Aeronautical Radio Communication Systems and Networks will also appeal to aircraft and radio equipment manufacturers and university students studying aeronautical or electronic engineering Key features Provides a broad and concise look at the various communications systems on board a typical aircraft from a theoretical system level and practical standpoint with worked examples and case studies throughout Considers all types of aircraft from light aircraft to large commercial jets and specialised supersonic aircraft Looks at
