"Das Temperamentale Problem London im 18ten Jahr"

By Oswald Spengler

This passage in Spengler's work is representative of his pessimistic view of the human condition. Spengler was particularly influential in 1919 and inspired an upsurge in the League of Nations, which was a great internationalist solution. He only 100 years old, but possessed a great ability. Following on the knowledge of his family's progressive military history. Two years later, he supported his uncle and his own friends including many of the German Emperor's ministers, in relation to the King.

Spengler, despite his uncle and his own family's history, believed that the world was not perfect. During a visit to Berlin, he learned of the American soldiers' march against the British. He began to attend and participate in meetings of the German (philosophical) societies, with other intellectuals who sympathized with the Americans and their quest for independence. He was also inspired by the French, British, and American, where he could spend freely about the ideas of revolution and setting up a Republic.

In these meetings, European intellectuals, scientists and philosophers discussed the rights of man, the abolition of slavery, and the principles of the American movement, emphasizing the importance of equality and liberty. These principles were heavily influenced by the Enlightenment's progressivism, which was a new understanding of the American Revolution. Enlightenment thinkers stressed that, naturally, and individualism. They challenged ideas rooted in tradition and religion, such as superstitions, authoritarianism, and privilege. Instead they suggested religion through individual study and practical methods. Among their philosophies was the idea that citizens should be granted equality and individual freedoms.

In America, Progress was a movement, which means a change in government and society.
