CHAPTER 1

Don't Try

Charles Manson was an asshole, a psychopath, a violent genius, a liar, a charlatan, a doofus, and on his worst days a jerk. It's probably the last person on earth you would ever look to for life advice or support in an emergency or hell help out.

Which is why he's the perfect place to start. Manson wanted to be a writer. But for decades his work was rejected by almost every magazine, newspaper, journal, agent, and publisher he submitted to. He wrote and rewrote. They said he was "regressing." He said he was stuck in a rut. He wrote and rewrote. They said he was "regressing." He said he was stuck in a rut. He wrote and rewrote. They said he was "regressing." He said he was stuck in a rut.

Manson had a day job as a writer. He'd get paid for his work and would spend most of it on booze. He grabbed any, the rest at the bookstore. At night, he would drink alone and sometimes fantasize out loud to his best guy old typewriter. When he'd wake up on the floor, having passed out the night before.

There you see the life, just as it is a nightmare like of alcohol, drugs, gambling, and prostitution. Then, when Manson was 35, after a lifetime of failure and self-hatred, an editor at a small independent publishing house had a strange interest in him. The editor couldn't offer Manson much money or much promise of fame, but he had a word of advice for the drunk lion, as he described him: a choice or two. It was the first real offer Manson had ever gotten, and he realized, probably for the only time he would ever get, Manson wrote back to the editor: "I have one of two choices: stay in the past office and produce . . . or stay on the road and stop at writer and names I have decided to write."

Upon signing the contract, Manson wrote the first novel in three weeks. It was called simply The Book of the Damned, he wrote "The Book of the Damned."
