Choosing An Executive Coach:

Choosing an Executive Coach Karen Miller Kirkland, 2001 Annotation Leadership in the top management ranks is often a lonely business. It can be difficult to get accurate feedback for example and it gets more difficult the higher you move in an organization. Many managers are reluctant to open up to colleagues and sometimes it may be ill advised to do so. Yet it is difficult to improve leadership skills and job performance without input from others about strengths, weaknesses, and options for improvement. Many managers recognize that to focus their personal development plans they need the uninterrupted time and attention of a skilled, objective facilitator. This guidebook is for managers who are considering executive coaching as a tool in their personal leadership development. It describes what executive coaching is and can help you decide whether coaching is appropriate for your situation. You will also learn how to locate and select a qualified coach with the professional and personal credentials and characteristics that match your developmental needs so that you can achieve the goals you've set.

Choosing an Executive Coach - The Influence of Gender on the Coach-Coachee Matching Process David Gray, 2015 Coaching has enjoyed substantial commercial growth but empirical support for its effectiveness is limited. Nowhere is this more so than in the matching process between coach and coachee. This study describes the results from a coaching programme in which coachees were asked to reflect on and justify their choice of coach. Initial qualitative results suggested that female coachees favoured the choice of female coaches partly as a role model of business success. Male coachees tended to justify the selection of a female coach as more approachable for the discussion of sensitive personal issues. A minority of male respondents also displayed sexist attitudes in their comments on the selection process. Subsequent quantitative analysis of the data however revealed no bias towards the choice of either female or male coaches. While the results show no statistical significance in gender choices for a minority of coachees, gender is a rather surprising factor in the selection process.
