

English Language Learners Face Unique Challenges

English language learners are the fastest-growing student population group in our schools. Providing them with high-quality services and programs is an important investment in America's future.

—NEA President Dennis Van Roekel

English Language Learners (ELLs) are the fastest growing segment of the public school population. Over the past 15 years, the number of ELL students has nearly doubled—to about 5 million. By 2015, ELL enrollment in U.S. schools will reach 10 million and, by 2025, nearly one out of every four public school students will be an English Language Learner.¹

Where do these students come from? Despite common assumptions to the contrary, native-born U.S. citizens predominate in the

ELL student population: 76 percent of elementary school and 56 percent of secondary school English Language Learners are native-born, and more than half of the ELLs in public secondary schools are second- or third-generation U.S. citizens.²

What else do we know about them? Two-thirds come from low-income families and three out of four ELLs are Spanish-speaking.³ But what is most significant—and troubling—is that these students' academic performance is well below that of their peers and that ELLs have excessively high dropout rates. NEA believes that closing the achievement gap for ELLs must be a priority.

ESEA/NCLB: The law's effect on ELL students

The No Child Left Behind Act (NCLB) is drawing some much-needed attention to the achievement gap of ELL students, but the way the law treats

these students is not helping anyone. Under the law, each district and school must show that the student body as a whole, as well as each subgroup of students such as ELLs, must meet the same academic standards in reading and math. (A subgroup is made up of students who share certain characteristics—students who are economically disadvantaged, students of color, students with disabilities, and students with limited English proficiency, for example. These groups are not mutually exclusive, so the test results for a student who is economically disadvantaged, Hispanic, and has limited English proficiency could be counted in all three sub-groups.)

To make adequate yearly progress (AYP), each district and school must generally show that each subgroup has met the state proficiency goal in reading and math. Accurately assessing these students in English—required by the law—is challenging. ELLs are expected to master content in English before they have reached a certain level of English proficiency. Accommodations provided during the testing are often of limited value and questionable validity. On top of the math and reading tests, ELLs also must meet certain English proficiency benchmarks.

What are the issues facing teachers of English Language Learners?

ELL students come from very different backgrounds and often face multiple challenges in the classroom. To complicate matters further, teachers
