

Chapter 1 Section 2 Notes

The scientific method is a systematic process of observation and experimentation to gather evidence about the natural world. It involves making observations, asking questions, forming hypotheses, testing hypotheses, and drawing conclusions.

Primary and Secondary Sources

Scientists use two main types of sources: primary sources (original data) and secondary sources (information derived from primary sources).

Primary sources are original data or observations. They include journal articles, conference proceedings, and technical reports. Secondary sources are summaries or interpretations of primary sources. They include textbooks, review articles, and meta-analyses.

Scientists use primary sources to gather data and secondary sources to understand the current state of knowledge in a field. They also use secondary sources to identify gaps in knowledge and to develop new hypotheses.

Scientists use primary sources to gather data and secondary sources to understand the current state of knowledge in a field. They also use secondary sources to identify gaps in knowledge and to develop new hypotheses.

Scientists use primary sources to gather data and secondary sources to understand the current state of knowledge in a field. They also use secondary sources to identify gaps in knowledge and to develop new hypotheses.

Peer Review

Peer review is a process where other scientists evaluate a researcher's work before it is published. This helps to ensure the quality and accuracy of the research. Peer review is a critical part of the scientific process.

Scientific Method

Scientists use the scientific method to test hypotheses and gather data. The scientific method is a systematic process of observation and experimentation.
