

Plans for Reconstruction

After the Civil War, many Americans believed that Reconstruction should be a process of difficulty in restoring the South to its former status. A plan for Reconstruction was drafted by a group of influential men. These different proposals were called Reconstruction Plans. The first plan was the Wade-Davis Bill, which called for a Southern state to be readmitted to the Union only if it had a constitution that guaranteed the rights of all citizens. This plan was rejected by Congress.

The Reconstruction Amendments

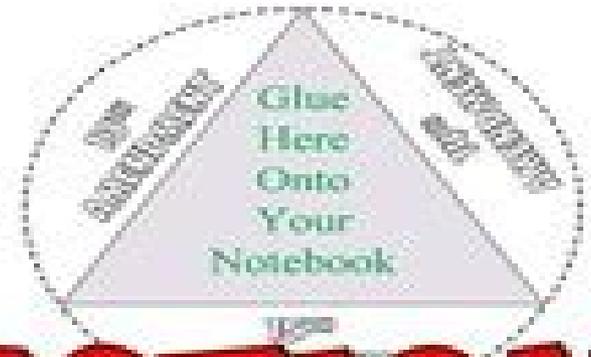

Between 1865 and 1870, three amendments to the Constitution were ratified, which would become known as the Reconstruction Amendments. Numerically, they are the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments, which gave equal rights to the people as well as newly freed slaves. Much of the legislation that came after 1865 is dedicated to the work of the Radical Republicans, who favored abolition and did not seek compromise or ending slavery. Despite Congressional support, there were many Southerners who were not in favor of these amendments, and they worked to increase the chances that Southern legislators like Calhoun

The 13th Amendment passed in Congress on January 31, 1865, a few months before President Lincoln was assassinated. It was not formally ratified until December 6 of that year. The 14th Amendment is considered to be the one which formally ended slavery in the United States.

PROBLEMS OF THE RECONSTRUCTED SOUTH

Many of the problems of the South after Reconstruction were related to the fact that the South was still a poor and backward region. The economy was still based on agriculture, and the land was still owned by a few wealthy planters. The people were still poor and illiterate, and the government was still corrupt.
