An increase in investment shifts the investment curve to the right from being a horizontal or downward-sloping line to a steeper downward-sloping line. The investment curve shifts to the right from being a horizontal line to being a downward-sloping line through the effect of the increased demand for investment. In the initial equilibrium, the economy is at the point where the investment curve intersects the 45-degree line. The new equilibrium is at the point where the new investment curve intersects the 45-degree line. The new equilibrium is at a higher level of output and a higher level of investment.

1. Investment is now higher, investment is now the amount of investment that is demanded, and investment is now higher. Investment is now higher, investment is now the amount of investment that is demanded, and investment is now higher.
