Hard Feelings Daniel Smith, 2026-03-03 From a psychotherapist and the New York Times bestselling author of Monkey Mind a thoughtful deeply personal exploration of our most difficult emotions arguing that they are not obstacles to overcome but essential messengers that can lead us toward wisdom and wholeness What if the emotions we fight hardest against anger shame envy regret jealousy annoyance despair are not enemies to be vanquished but essential guides to self knowledge When two birthday gifts a centuries old treatise on melancholy and a book of Bosch's hellscapes arrived just months before the birth of Daniel Smith's second child he began questioning our culture's dismissal of difficult feelings and his own lifelong struggle against these so-called negative emotions Moving between intimate personal narrative and rich intellectual exploration Smith investigates how our relationship with negative emotions has evolved through history from the Seven Deadly Sins to modern psychology's sometimes equally damning classifications He explores what science psychology art and philosophy can and cannot tell us about the nature of emotion itself challenging conventional wisdom about what our feelings really are and how they function With unflinching honesty about his own emotional turbulence and the insights gained from his work as a psychotherapist Smith makes a compelling case that our negative emotions serve crucial purposes if only we would listen to what they're trying to tell us Whether examining the striking absence of anger among the Inuit or confronting his own emotional inheritance as a new father Smith offers a perspective that is both deeply humane and surprisingly hopeful This book is not so much a guide to banishing difficult feelings but rather an invitation to wholeness to feeling everything and discovering that even our darkest emotions contain intelligence meaning and the potential for profound transformation
