

Colour

Colour is often one of the most exciting components of a painting, but what exactly is it? Understanding the basic principles of colour theory helps you analyse how artists exploit and manipulate it to their work. They use colour together with composition, perspective, and light and shade to strengthen the impact of the subject matter.

Mixing and comparing colours

The perception of light makes colours visible. Light travels in waves of different lengths, and the same level of electromagnetic radiation gives rise to different colours. The range of wavelengths perceived as red is called the visible spectrum – the shorter visible wavelengths appear as violet, and the longest as red. Artists can gain insight from scientific principles that describe colour wavelengths and reflectance. Color of colours is fundamental work. The colours in a painting are usually the colours of reflected light.

The colour wheel

From understanding and using color, artists have developed a color wheel, which is a circular diagram that represents the color spectrum. It is a tool used by artists to understand the relationships between colors. The color wheel is divided into three main sections: primary colors, secondary colors, and tertiary colors. Primary colors are the colors that cannot be created by mixing other colors. Secondary colors are created by mixing two primary colors. Tertiary colors are created by mixing a primary color and a secondary color. The color wheel also shows the relationships between colors, such as complementary colors (opposite each other) and analogous colors (adjacent to each other).

Primary and secondary

Primary colors are the colors that cannot be created by mixing other colors. Secondary colors are created by mixing two primary colors. Tertiary colors are created by mixing a primary color and a secondary color. The color wheel also shows the relationships between colors, such as complementary colors (opposite each other) and analogous colors (adjacent to each other).

More colour mixtures

More color mixtures are created by mixing primary and secondary colors. Tertiary colors are created by mixing a primary color and a secondary color. The color wheel also shows the relationships between colors, such as complementary colors (opposite each other) and analogous colors (adjacent to each other).

Intensity

Intensity is the degree to which a color is perceived as bright or dull. It is determined by the amount of light that is reflected by the color. A color that reflects a lot of light is perceived as bright, while a color that reflects a little light is perceived as dull. Artists can use intensity to create contrast and to draw the viewer's eye to a particular area of the painting.

Transparency

Transparency is the degree to which a color is perceived as transparent or opaque. It is determined by the amount of light that passes through the color. A color that allows a lot of light to pass through is perceived as transparent, while a color that allows very little light to pass through is perceived as opaque. Artists can use transparency to create depth and to draw the viewer's eye to a particular area of the painting.
