Short Answer

1. Discuss the difference between the conduction airway and the respiratory airway.
   The conducting airways: the passage way air moves through as it passes through the atmosphere and the lungs, but the respiratory airway: where gas exchange takes place. it facilitate gas exchange and these are located entirely within the luns and are represented by respiratory bronchioles, alveolar ducts, alveolar sacs, and alveoli.
2. Discuss why the respiratory system is plagued with many infectious diseases.
   The respiratory passage harbour many pathogens. The patogen multiples in or on the epithelium, causing inflamation, increased mucus secretion, and impared mucociliary function: other lung functions may also be affected.
3. The most common symptom of respiratory infections is congestion.
4. Sinusitis infections often cause severe sinus pain.
5. List the complications associated with pharyngitis.
   Epiglottitis, otitis media, mastoiditis
   Sinusitis, Acute rheumatic fever
6. Studies show that up to 8-27% of community-acquired pneumonia cases are viral.
7. Discuss why patients on a ventilator are at a greater risk of pneumonia.
   The majority of ICUs are closed units and air circulation is not smooth. The exhaled gasses and secretions of ICU patients contain a large number of pathogens causing air contamination. The change of obtaining hospital acquired infections is also increased with extension of hospital stay.
8. Discuss a treatment option for health care–acquired and ventilator-associated pneumonia.
   In general, for both hospital-acquired pneumonia (HAP) and VAP, 7 days of treatment with appropriate antibiotics/antibiotics is recommended. This
