

ENGLISH GENERAL PAPER

Paper 8019/01
Essay

Key messages

Candidates should:

- Make the introduction relevant and focused on the question.
- Address all the strands of the question.
- Develop each point with relevant examples.
- Analyse and evaluate, rather than describe.
- Use the conclusion to evaluate and synthesise arguments rather than repeating them.
- Check carefully for errors in grammar, especially in agreement, tense, prepositions and plurals.
- Use precise vocabulary and idioms appropriate to the context.

General comments

The majority of candidates produced answers that were focused, clearly written and contained some developed argument. The best responses were analytical and evaluative. Many candidates focused carefully on the key words in the questions and wrote outline plans following a 'point; development and example' pattern. The candidates who did this usually maintained their focus on the question and were less likely to have long descriptive passages that were tangential to the main topic. The best candidates analysed and evaluated their arguments in the main body of the response as well as in the conclusion.

Many had planned their essays and this contributed well to the organisation of ideas and arguments. Some candidates switched questions after writing several paragraphs, so candidates are advised to read through all the questions carefully before making their choice. Candidates generally managed their time well and very few incomplete essays were seen though some had rushed their concluding paragraphs, but these were the exception rather than the rule.

Almost all essays were structured into paragraphs with introductions and conclusions, and links between the paragraphs. Linguistic devices linking sentences and paragraphs and/or signalling the progress or indeed, change of direction, in an argument should be aptly chosen in context. For instance, 'hence', 'moreover', 'nevertheless', 'consequently' and 'although' are helpful connectors. There was some evidence of prepared introductions on a theme and it was often the case that those candidates who used these, did not fully focus on the question in their responses. Candidates should avoid providing a summary of the points which will be discussed, in the introduction. Some candidates wrote a number of largely descriptive or illustrative paragraphs that were relevant to the topic but did not make salient arguments in terms of the question wording until some way through the essay.

The level of exemplification was generally good. Some weaker responses provided more general rather than specific examples. There were some examples of spurious claims and inaccurate statistical data which could be easily disproved. Assertive linking of definite causes and effects should be avoided, such as 'People in the past were poorly educated so there was a higher rate of crime' or 'Watching comedies will lower the rates of stress and suicide'. Sweeping statements using words such as all/everybody/always/young people/old people should also be avoided.

There were many memorised quotations seen and most were used appropriately although a minority did not fit the context. Some candidates needed to frame or punctuate quotations within a sentence or attribute them. A few candidates inserted quotations without comment or making clear what their relevance was to the point in the essay.
