The ability to control the location of a spacecraft atmospheric interface reentry has been traditionally accomplished using propulsion. A novel technique is presented here where a predefined point of atmospheric interface reentry is achieved by adjusting the aerodynamic drag of a spacecraft in a circular orbit. If this method is employed at a sufficiently high starting altitude, any ground-track point accessible by the orbit can be targeted. This method can be broken up into two different parts. The first consists of finding the decay profile that achieves the desired reentry location. The second consists of keeping the spacecraft within this nominal decay trajectory, given the atmospheric uncertainty and other perturbations. The two parts of this method are presented here in detail. Finally, a case study is provided to demonstrate how this method could work in a realistic scenario and to evaluate its performance. The case study shows that a reentry point can be targeted with a 3 σ error of less than 200 km, using a typical Global Positioning System for navigation. Finally, a discussion of potential applications is provided.

1. Introduction

THE aerodynamic forces experienced by spacecraft orbiting in low Earth orbit are usually considered perturbations that need to be avoided or compensated. Although this is generally the case, these aerodynamic forces can be controlled and exploited to achieve a useful purpose. Research has already been conducted to use aerodynamic drag to perform an aerocapture, control a spacecraft orbit, rendezvous with another vehicle, do formation flight, and do constellation maintenance [1–8]. Also, the use of aerodynamic forces has also been studied to control the attitude of a spacecraft [9–11].

Here a novel method is presented where the aerodynamic drag is used to target the atmospheric interface reentry point of a spacecraft's decaying orbit. The method presented here has been only applied to circular orbits and its extension to eccentric orbits is left for future studies. The assumption of circular orbits is not only applied to the initial orbit, but is also enforced as the orbit decays. It is also important to note that the method presented here only controls the location of the atmospheric interface reentry point and not the landing or impact point (if the spacecraft was to survive reentry). The atmospheric interface reentry point, also known as the entry interface in the literature, can be defined as the point where the interaction of the spacecraft with the atmosphere is so great, in terms of aerodynamic forces, that these forces completely dominate the flight dynamics. The altitude when this occurs depends on the vehicle aerodynamic properties and the atmospheric conditions, but it is usually set between 120–80 km [12]. Here an intermediate altitude of 100 km has been selected.

The control of the aerodynamic drag is assumed to be achieved through the control over the ballistic coefficient. Therefore, the drag is modulated to achieve the desired decay rate at all times. How to control the ballistic coefficient of a spacecraft and its practical considerations are outside the scope of this paper, but it is not difficult to envision simple ways to do so. For example, changing the cross-sectional area of the spacecraft by changing the attitude of the spacecraft or by altering the geometry of a drag sail would do.

Changing the ballistic coefficient, by changing the cross-sectional area, for example, is enough to alter the drag that the spacecraft creates, but it is not enough to have knowledge of this drag. The knowledge of the atmospheric properties (mainly density) is required to bridge the gap between controlling the ballistic coefficient and controlling the drag. This information of the atmospheric conditions can be obtained by using atmospheric models (estimation) or by using in situ measurements by onboard sensors. A detailed analysis of how to obtain this information has also been left outside the scope of this paper.

The idea of using drag to control certain parameters of the atmospheric interface reentry location is not completely new. Some work has been done to use a sudden drag increase in the last few hours of the decay to reduce the uncertainty of the time and location of the reentry interface [13]. The same approach is taken in [14] where a sudden increase in drag in the last few orbits is used to make the spacecraft reenter over an unpopulated area and reduce the risk to population and property that any surviving parts that reach the ground might pose. These two works, using the same method, only provide a limited capability to change the atmospheric interface reentry location in the along-track direction. Because this is done close to the reentry interface, the accessible targets are limited to the locations defined (approximately) by the last few orbits' ground track (along track). The method presented here starts modulating the drag at much
