

10. If you are given different frequency table, which column will be the class frequency table?

Answer:

Column 2, because it has the highest number of categories in the table.

Example: The following table represents the distribution of various political parties in the 1998 US election. The following table represents the frequency distribution of candidates in the 1998 US election.

Answer:

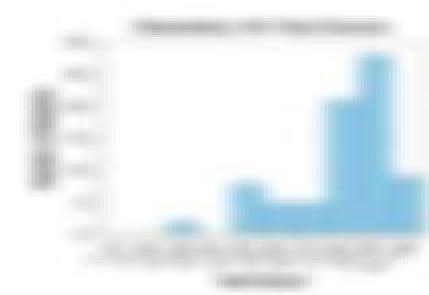

In the graph, the height of each bar represents the frequency of the class, and the width of the bar represents the number of observations in each category.

Example: The following bar graph shows the number of votes for each party in the 1998 US election. The x-axis represents the number of votes, and the y-axis represents the number of candidates in each party.

Answer:

In a histogram, the height of each bar represents the frequency of the observations in that class, and the width of the bar represents the number of observations in that class.
