cosmetic manufacturers Rather cosmetic manufacturers may decide to comply with voluntary FDA regulations on registration Except for color additives FDA does not require premarket notification safety testing review or approval of the chemicals used in cosmetic products Cosmetic manufacturers also are not required to use good manufacturing practices GMP although FDA has released GMP guidelines for cosmetic manufacturers nor required to file ingredient information with or report adverse reactions to the agency Instead under a voluntary FDA program cosmetic manufacturers and packagers may report the ingredients used in their product formulations FDA does not have the authority to require a manufacturer to recall a cosmetic product from the marketplace although the agency has issued general regulations on voluntary recalls The agency s ability to issue regulations on cosmetic products is limited by the agency s statutory authorities or lack thereof As a result cosmetics are arguably more self regulated than other FDA regulated products The manner in which a cosmetic product could or should be regulated however is not always clear FDA s guidelines have provided the cosmetic industry with considerable flexibility for product development and claims
