Real Estate Valuation Theory Ko Wang, Marvin L. Wolverton, 2002-09-30 Is real property appraisal evolving or have all of the big ideas already been conceived This question has been circulating among the leaders of the Appraisal Institute during the past several annual meetings usually encountering little in the way of satisfying answers This is not too surprising because grand ideas and new knowledge do not typically evolve from off hand conversation They are the product of focused intellectual activity and hours of difficult work This unquenched thirst for new knowledge is the primary reason for assembling this collection of new manuscripts dealing with valuation theory which was financially underwritten by the Appraisal Institute Their generosity and willingness to partner with the American Real Estate Society made this collection of thoughtful and thought provoking essays possible They are the result of a global response to a worldwide call for papers and demonstrate that real estate valuation is indeed an international discipline The United States Australia and New Zealand Southeast Asia the Pacific Rim and Europe are all represented by this impressive collection of authors Together the eighteen essays that make up this volume demonstrate that there are a sufficient number of big ideas to challenge and improve the appraisal profession for years to come Real Estate Valuation Theory is organized around five categories of intellectual contribution to the whole appraiser decision making and valuation accuracy application of nontraditional appraisal techniques such as regression and the minimum variance grid method appraising contaminated property ad valorem tax assessment and new perspectives on traditional appraisal methods One common thread is that all of the papers are exceptionally well written and thought provoking

The valuation of Real Estate in Germany Stefan Hocke, 2006-04-06 Diploma Thesis from the year 2006 in the subject Business economics Investment and Finance grade 1.0 Heilbronn University of Applied Sciences language English abstract Real estate is one of the most important assets This is expressed in Germany's national accounts where net construction assets are 86% of total net fixed assets. In addition, the usage of real estate belongs to the basic needs of people. Consequently, the disposition of real estate regarding construction and acquisition contributes strongly to the economical development of the net stock of fixed assets within a national economy. However, in the valuation of property, particular difficulties appear that complicate rational capital disposition. Basically, property valuation methods are difficult to apply or even fail in respect of rental income forecasts, assessment of risk, and market orientation. Other influential factors originate from the heterogeneous character of properties and the complex structure of real estate markets. This work aims for the examination of codified and international property valuation methods in terms of their theoretical structure, practical application, and critical aspects that influence a precise property valuation. In the following, principles regarding property valuation are introduced. This is followed by a detailed description of codified and international valuation methods. Subsequently, all methods are applied on a real-world valuation example that illustrates the methods and their applicability. Afterwards, some decisive valuation methods are critically reviewed regarding their methodology, applicability, and marketability. In summary, the reader is given a classification in form of a matrix that is based on the aforementioned criteria. Further, some favourable components are identified that are complemented with recommendations for the use in practice.

Real Estate Valuation G. Jason Goddard, 2021-12-15. Real Estate Valuation: A Subjective Approach highlights the subjective valuation components of residential and commercial real estate which can lead to a range of acceptable property value conclusions. It discusses the causes of housing booms and goes in depth into the heterogeneity of commercial real estate property valuation via examples from owner-occupied multifamily residential, hotel, office, retail, warehouse, condo conversion, and mortgage-backed security areas of real estate. Other topics explored include the role of machine learning and AI in real estate valuation, market participant value perceptions, and the challenge of time in the valuation process. The primary theoretical basis for the range of acceptable values and the subjectivity of property valuation focuses on the work of G. L. S. Shackle from the Austrian School of Economics. This illuminating textbook is suitable for undergraduate and master's students of real estate finance and will also be useful for practitioners in residential and commercial real estate.

Going Concern Valuation L. Deane Wilson MA ASA, Robin G. Wilson, 2012-02-09. Our purpose in writing this book is multifaceted. First, this book aims to present a clear understanding of going concern valuations at the same time resolving the current misrepresentations surrounding the issue Additionally this book offers a new set of rules readers can use to determine which property types qualify as going concern valuations and which do not This book presents an understanding that in performing a Going Concern Valuation of properties which are perceived to have a business component it may not be possible to segregate allocate or value the components individually For example when appraising the going concern value of a motel with occupancy of 75% it could be argued and possibly proven that there is a value that can be separated from the overall value or going concern value to the business component On the other hand however appraising that same motel with only 40% occupancy presents a completely different set of circumstances that could easily draw completely opposite conclusions It simply may be a lack of sufficient tools or data to argue and prove that the business component in fact has value separate from the real estate To do so with authority is tantamount to ignorance or arrogance
