MUSLEH UDDIN, EJAZ GHANI, and TARIQ MAHMOOD

This paper explores the determinants of export performance at the level of firms in respect of their characteristics and supply side constraints. The analysis is based on a survey of export-oriented firms in four major sectors. The results indicate a relationship between the better performance of foreign-owned firms to their better know-how and resources compared to the domestically owned firms. Export performance is positively affected by the level of investment in market/client oriented technologies. Lack of certification of product and process standards is the main supply side constraint adversely affecting the firms' export performance. Facilitation measures like export processing zones, internationally recognised testing labs, and industrial clusters would be helpful in improving the export performance of firms.

1. INTRODUCTION

Exports are widely believed to play a crucial role in the development process. Access to the global market allows domestic firms to achieve economies of scale and thus enhance their profitability. Being a source of foreign exchange earnings, higher exports enable a country to meet its growth and development needs through import of capital goods and raw materials. Exports lead to an improvement in economic efficiency by increasing the degree of competition, and contribute to productivity gains through diffusion of technical knowledge and learning by doing.<sup>1</sup> Export-led growth of East Asian countries and the recent growth achievements of India and China through their integration with global markets has brought export promotion to the forefront in development policy agendas of most developing countries.

Despite vigorous efforts to promote exports, Pakistan's exports as a proportion of its GDP have made no significant gains over the years with the country's share in global exports standing at a meagre 0.13 percent. In order to understand why Pakistan's exports have failed to pick up despite favourable export policies, this paper analyses the determinants of export performance at the level of firms in terms of their specific characteristics and supply side constraints. The analysis is based on a survey of export-

Pakistan International Monetary Fund. Middle East and Central Asia Dept., 2016-01-12 This Selected Issues paper reviews Pakistan's tax regime evaluates the level and composition of tax revenues and estimates tax buoyancy and efficiency Despite recent progress under the program Pakistan's tax revenue remains very low relative to comparator developing countries and the tax effort expected for the country's level of development This reflects narrow tax bases overgenerous tax concessions and exemptions weak and fragmented revenue administrations and structural features of the economy The findings suggest that unlocking tax revenue potential requires broadening tax bases strengthening revenue administration and taxpayer compliance eliminating distortionary tax expenditures and rationalizing tax policy for greater efficiency and equity through a comprehensive and front loaded reform agenda

Utility Tariff Setting for Economic Efficiency and Financial Sustainability Herath M. Gunatilake,2008

This paper reviews the literature on utility tariff setting with an emphasis on economic efficiency and financial sustainability The paper first discusses the merits as well as practical limitations in applying marginal cost pricing It then presents details on estimation of revenue requirements of utilities under two regulatory regimes rate of return regulation and performance based regulation Finally the paper discusses how to set tariffs when an enabling environment for achieving both financial sustainability and economic efficiency is lacking Under such circumstances the paper argues that initial focus should be on cost recovery As the enabling environment improves goals of tariff setting can include broader objectives The success of such a gradual approach depends on i participatory and rigorous analytical work to assess the feasibility of the type of tariff and ii policy and institutional reforms regulatory enhancements and performance improvements of the utility to create an enabling environment for implementing advanced types of tariffs
