

Plans for Reconstruction

After the Civil War, the country was divided, and it became obvious that there would be some difficulty in repairing the damage that had been inflicted upon the South.

At the end of the war, a plan for Reconstruction was drafted by a group of officials. These officials proposed a series of Reconstruction Amendments, including a Reconstruction Act that would set the first step toward a Southern state that had seceded from the Union. The 13th Amendment would be the first step toward the process of ending slavery. The Reconstruction Act would set the first step toward the process of ending slavery. The Reconstruction Act would set the first step toward the process of ending slavery.

The Reconstruction Amendments

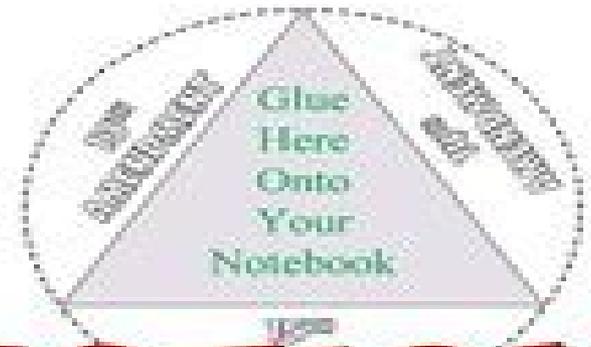

Between 1865 and 1870, three Amendments to the Constitution were ratified, which would become known as the Reconstruction Amendments. Numerically, they are the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments, which gave equal citizenship to the formerly enslaved or newly freed slaves. Much of the legislation that came after 1865 is dedicated to the work of the Radical Republicans, who favored abolition and did not seek compromise or ending slavery. Despite Congressional support, there were many Southerners who were not in favor of these amendments, and they worked to increase the resistance that had begun against the Civil War.

The 13th Amendment passed in Congress on January 31, 1865, a few months before President Lincoln was assassinated. It was not formally ratified until December 6 of that year. The 14th Amendment is considered to be the year which formally ended slavery in the United States.
