

ELEMENTS OF A GRID

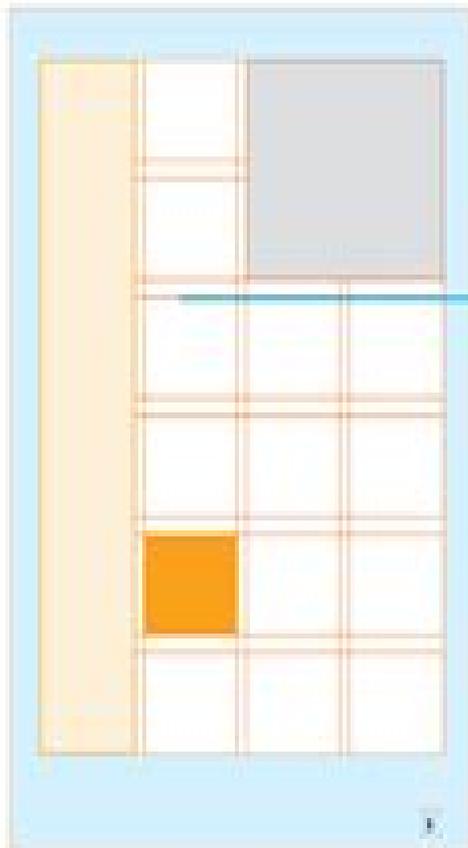

1. Know the Components

The main components of a grid are margins, columns, columns, leading, tracking, gutter lines, and baselines. Starting with a page that is four pages wide and four pages high, let's see how you might use these elements to create a grid.

MARGINS are vertical columns that hold text or images. The width and number of columns on a page or across the entire spread are determined by the margins.

MODULAR are individual elements, typically, centered areas, providing a hierarchy, ordered grid. Consistent modular can create columns and rows of varying sizes.

MARGINS are buffer zones. They represent the amount of space between the text and the page content. Margins can also house secondary information, such as notes and captions.

MODULAR are groups of elements or content that can be used specifically for type, illustrations, or other elements.

FLYLINE are elements that break space into horizontal bands for which text, images, or graphics are created for each page and intended to guide a reader across a page.

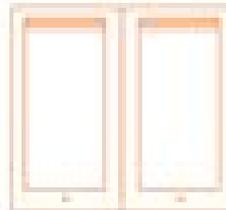

MARGINS are a useful example of a modular, including elements for content that appear in the text. In this example, white space, margins, and text are used to create a grid of columns and rows.

BASIC GRID DIAGRAMS

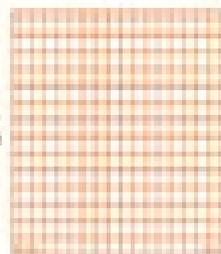

2. Learn the Basic Structures

Although the diagrams below show common structures, there are additional variations on the basic configurations. The illustrations guide the designer and their client toward layout from columns to the margins.

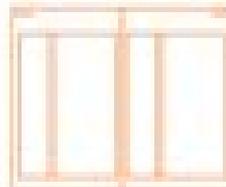

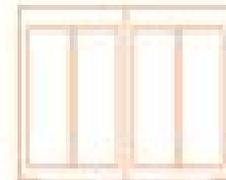

1 COLUMN is a primary used for continuous reading text such as novels, reports, or books. The block of text is the main feature on the page, leaving a blank space.

MODULAR are used for controlling the look of columns. Alternative use is newspaper, columns, right, and left. The columns are used horizontal columns, which arrange the structure into single blocks of text.

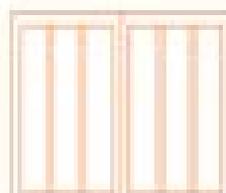

2 COLUMN can be useful to control a set amount of space within a specific column. A multi-column grid can be arranged with columns of equal or unequal width, or used to create a page that is wider than the other. The main content is usually the width of the entire column.

MODULAR focus on page left lines. They hierarchy of grid are composed of horizontal columns. Some designers suggest vertical page hierarchy. To make grid efficient, they design from horizontal to vertical lines.

3 COLUMN grid is used for readability. Four steps or five columns grid, columns multiple columns of varying width can be used for responses and articles.

GRID OF COLUMNS

- What is the subject? Is it complex?
- How much of it is text?
- What is the goal?
- Who is the main focus?
