Chapter 7: Research design

As stated in the introduction, the research design adopted in this inquiry was primarily influenced by Guba and Lincoln's (1989) investigation of Naturalistic Inquiry, which they later acknowledged were in terms of Constructivism (Guba and Lincoln, 1994), and to a lesser extent Charmaz's (2006) constructivist investigation of Grounded Theory. These are explored upon in the next sections with reference to Crotty's (1998) four research design elements. Decisions that were taken that influenced the research design and several who the narrative.

7.1 Crotty's research design elements

Crotty claims that the terminology used in research literature is confusing with epistemologies, theoretical perspectives, methodologies and methods "thrown together in practice often as if they were all comparable terms" (Crotty, 1998:2). Crotty suggests these terms represent distinct hierarchical levels of decision making within the research design process. Paradigmatically, a researcher initially adopts a particular stance towards the nature of knowledge (for example, objectivism or subjectivism). This stance or epistemology will underlie the entire research process and govern the particular theoretical perspective selected (for example, phenomenology or interpretivism). The theoretical perspectives will be implicit in research questions and dictate the researcher's choice of methodology (for example, grounded theory or ethnography). Finally, the methodology or plan of action will in turn inform the choice of research methods employed (for example, questionnaires or interviews). Crotty (1998) recognises that he omits ontology from the research process but contributes to with epistemology claiming the two are mutually dependent and difficult to distinguish conceptually when discussing research issues: "to talk about the construction of meaning [epistemology] is to talk of the construction of a meaningful reality [ontology]" (Crotty, 1998:10). Grbavac (2007), who reviews key research processes from research on Crotty's (1998) four research design elements, implies that these four decision making elements tend to a research approach which tends to be more qualitative or inductive, primarily dependent on the researcher's initial stance towards the nature of knowledge.
