phase currents and DC bus voltage of the synchronous rectifier Observer design of the back EMF estimation has been developed for constant engine speed In this work we are interested in nonlinear observer design of the back EMF estimation for the real case of variable engine speed Initial back EMF estimate can be obtained from a first order sliding mode observer SMO based on the phase current model A fourth order nonlinear asymptotic observer NAO complemented by the dynamics of the back EMF with time varying frequency and amplitude is then incorporated into the observer design for chattering reduction Since the cost of required phase current sensors may be prohibitive the most applicable approach in real implementation by measuring DC current of the synchronous rectifier is carried out in the dissertation It is shown that the DC link current consists of sequential windows with partial information of the phase currents hence the cascaded NAO is responsible not only for the purpose of chattering reduction but also for necessarily accomplishing the process of estimation Stability analyses of the proposed estimators are considered for most linear and time varying cases The stability of the NAO without speed information is substantiated by both numerical and experimental results Prospective estimation algorithms for the case of battery current measurements are investigated Theoretical study indicates that the convergence of the proposed LAO may be provided by high gain inputs Since the order of the LAO NAO for the battery current case is one order higher than that of the link current measurements it is hardly to find moderate values of the input gains for the real time sampled data systems Technical difficulties in implementation of such high order discrete time nonlinear estimators have been discussed Directions of further investigations have been provided ASME Technical Papers ,1999 □□□□□□ ,1998
