The Global Making of Policing Jana Hönke, Markus-Michael Müller, 2016-08-12 This edited volume analyses the global making of security institutions and practices in our postcolonial world The volume will offer readers the opportunity to gain a deeper understanding of the global making of how security is thought of and practiced from US urban policing diaspora politics and transnational security professionals to policing encounters in Afghanistan Palestine Colombia or Haiti It critically examines and decentres conventional perspectives on security governance and policing In doing so the book offers a fresh analytical approach moving beyond dominant one sided perspectives on the transnational character of security governance which suggest a diffusion of models and practices from a Western centre to the rest of the globe Such perspectives omit much of the experimenting and learning going on in the post colony as well as the active agency and participation of seemingly subaltern actors in producing and co constituting what is conventionally thought of as Western policing practice knowledge and institutions This is the first book that studies the truly global making of security institutions and practices from a postcolonial perspective by bringing together highly innovative in depth empirical cases studies from across the globe It will be of particular interest to students and scholars interested in International Relations and Global Studies critical Security Studies Criminology and Postcolonial Studies

Policing the World Malcolm Anderson, 1989 The need for co operation between the police forces of the world has never been greater there is a huge growth in international drug trafficking and terrorism and many social and economic activities are becoming increasingly internationalized Interpol is the oldest and best known institution for tackling these problems but is it right for today's conditions or should it be supplanted by new arrangements In this the first scholarly study of Interpol and of other contemporary forms of police co operation across national boundaries Malcolm Anderson discusses the proliferation of different forms of co operation He recognizes that contact between police forces of sovereign independent states has always been a sensitive matter and analyses uncertainty about how far police co
