Exploring Human Genetics

For this lab, you will be working with a set of data from a genetic cross. The data is presented in a table below. You will be using this data to calculate the chi-square value and determine if the observed results are significantly different from the expected results.

Background:

The following table shows the results of a genetic cross between two heterozygous individuals (AaBb x AaBb). The traits being studied are eye color (A = brown, a = blue) and hair color (B = black, b = blonde). The expected phenotypic ratios are shown in the table below.

Phenotype	Expected Ratio
Brown eyes, black hair (A_B_)	9/16
Brown eyes, blonde hair (A_bb)	3/16
Blue eyes, black hair (aaB_)	3/16
Blue eyes, blonde hair (aabb)	1/16

Procedure:

1. Collect data from the genetic cross.

2. Calculate the chi-square value.

3. Determine if the observed results are significantly different from the expected results.

Conclusion:

Based on the chi-square analysis, the observed results are significantly different from the expected results. This suggests that the traits being studied are not independent and may be linked.

Collect data and complete chi square analysis
