

NOMEX™ TYPE 414

NOMEX™ Type 414 is a woven fiber-reinforced, nonwoven fabric, non-fused and nonporous sheet. It is chemically and thermally stable to NOMEX™ Type 414 heat-treated fiber under different conditions of service. It is used primarily in the manufacture of fire-resistant linings for the walls and ceiling of a combustion chamber and the floor including an area for a burner when in other applications where the specific characteristics are desirable. Used in turbine generator housings, another example is its use as a flame-resistant, heat-shield, heat-protective application for an engine compartment. For more information, contact DuPont™ NOMEX™ Type 414.

Please note:

The properties in this data sheet are based on average values indicated and do not represent individual lots. These properties apply to whatever heat treatment is used. "Average" conditions for applications are 200 °F (93 °C) for fire-retardant, 250 °F (121 °C) for electrical applications. NOMEX™ papers have excellent electrical properties in the operating normal ambient (200 °F) condition at the normal thickness (0.005 to 0.010 in.) for electrical insulating applications. The electrical properties listed are based on the average condition of sheet as received unless otherwise specified.

Electrical properties

The typical electrical properties listed for NOMEX™ Type 414 were determined based on the 200 °F heat-treated average condition of sheet. Temperature change does not significantly affect the electrical properties of NOMEX™ Type 414. Temperature effect testing data through typical differences in the electrical properties between heat-treated and unheated NOMEX™ Type 414 is shown in the table below. Higher moisture content (10% water) also affects electrical properties. NOMEX™ Type 414 is approved for hot areas, such as engine compartment applications. The geometry of the sheet is critical in electrical insulating or high-voltage applications. For more
