Combining Minds Luke Roelofs, 2019-01-28 Combining Minds is about the idea of minds built up out of other minds whether this is possible and what it would mean if it were Roelofs surveys many areas of philosophy and psychology analysing and evaluating denials and affirmations of mental combination that have been made in regard to everything from brain structure to psychological conflict to social cooperation In each case he carefully distinguishes different senses in which subjectivity might be composite and different arguments for and against them concluding that composite subjectivity in various forms may be much more common than we think Combining Minds is also the first book length defence of constitutive panpsychism against all aspects of the combination problem Constitutive panpsychism is an increasingly prominent theory holding that consciousness is naturally inherent in matter with human consciousness built up out of this basic consciousness the same way human bodies are built up out of physical matter Such a view requires that many very simple conscious minds can compose a single very complex one and a major objection made against constitutive panpsychism is that they cannot that minds simply do not combine This is the combination problem which Roelofs scrutinizes dissects and refutes It reflects not only contemporary debates but a long philosophical tradition of contrasting the apparently indivisible unity of the mind with the deep and pervasive divisibility of the material world Combining Minds draws together the threads of this problem and develops a powerful and flexible response to it

Chao, 2025-10-16 This book examines how continental great powers have attempted to develop and wield strong navies since 1801 Continental Powers and Naval Development argues that a continental great power s ability to build and effectively use a strong navy is greatly affected by two factors a naval force design capable of executing national strategy strategy coherence and the deployment of that navy to places or for purposes that minimize the dominant naval power s threat perception threat diffusion Each factor is deceptively difficult for a continental great power to achieve but through an analysis of four historical case studies this book shows how both factors are vital not just for successful naval development but for keeping the peace among great powers Finally it highlights how states commonly thought of as unnatural naval powers can nonetheless achieve their political objectives at sea This book will be of much interest to students of naval history maritime strategy and International Relations
