

General case: Population Biology

Question: How do we model effect population growth?

Escherichia coli

Bacillus subtilis

How do we model population growth?

How do we model population growth?

What does population growth mean? Population growth is the change in the number of individuals in a population over time. It is determined by the birth rate (the number of new individuals added) and the death rate (the number of individuals lost).

The net growth rate is the difference between the birth rate and the death rate. If the birth rate is greater than the death rate, the population will grow. If the death rate is greater than the birth rate, the population will decline. If the birth rate equals the death rate, the population will remain constant.

Population growth can be modeled using the exponential growth equation: $N(t) = N_0 e^{rt}$, where $N(t)$ is the number of individuals at time t , N_0 is the initial number of individuals, r is the net growth rate, and t is time.

Exponential growth is only a good approximation for short periods of time. In the long run, resources are limited, and the population will reach a carrying capacity. This is modeled by the logistic growth equation: $N(t) = \frac{K}{1 + e^{-r(t - t_0)}}$, where K is the carrying capacity, t_0 is the time at which the population is at half the carrying capacity, and r is the intrinsic growth rate.

Population growth is also affected by density-dependent factors. These are factors that affect the growth rate of a population as its density increases. Examples include competition for resources, predation, and disease.

Density-dependent factors can be modeled using the logistic growth equation. The carrying capacity K represents the maximum number of individuals that the environment can support. The intrinsic growth rate r represents the maximum rate of population increase.

Population growth is also affected by density-independent factors. These are factors that affect the growth rate of a population regardless of its density. Examples include weather, disasters, and human activities.

Density-independent factors can be modeled using the exponential growth equation. The net growth rate r represents the overall rate of population change, taking into account both density-dependent and density-independent factors.
