Chapter 1: The Reaping

When I wake up, the other side of the bed is cold. I reach out for my sister Prim's warmth but only find the rough mattress. She must have had a bad dream and gone to our mother's bed. Today is the reaping day.

I prop myself up on one elbow and see Prim curled up with our mother, their cheeks together. My mother looks younger in sleep, though still tired. Prim's face is fresh and lovely, just like the primrose she's named after. I've heard my mother was very beautiful once.

Sitting by Prim's knees is a very ugly cat. Its nose is squashed, it has only half an ear, and its eyes are a sickly color. Prim named him Buttercup, saying his yellow fur matches the flower. He doesn't like me. I tried to drown him years ago when Prim brought him home because he was covered in fleas and had a swollen belly. But Prim cried so much that I had to let him stay. Now, he's useful for catching mice and rats. I even feed him the leftovers from my hunts. He has stopped hissing at me.

I get out of bed and put on my hunting boots, trousers, and shirt. I tuck my braid into a cap and grab my bag. On the table, wrapped in basil leaves, is a small goat cheese—Prim's gift for the reaping day. I put it in my pocket and go outside.

Our part of District 12, called the Seam, is usually busy with coal miners at this hour. But today, the streets are empty. The reaping doesn't start until two, so people might be sleeping in.

Our house is near the edge of the Seam. I pass through a few gates to reach the Meadow. There's a high fence around District 12, topped with barbed wire. It's supposed to be electrified all the time to keep out dangerous animals, but it's usually safe to touch because the power is often out. I check for the hum that means the fence is live, but it's silent. I crawl under a loose section of the fence, which is close to home.

In the woods, I get my bow and arrows from a hollow log. Even though hunting is illegal and has severe penalties, many people hunt because they need food. My father made the bow, and I keep it hidden in the woods. If officials found out, he would have been executed. Peacekeepers often ignore us hunters because they need fresh meat too. But arming people from the Seam is not allowed.

In the fall, some people sneak into the woods to pick apples, always staying close to the Meadow. "District Twelve. Where you can starve to death in safety," I mutter. Even here, in the middle of nowhere, you worry someone might overhear you.
