Variables were correlated with one another, as seen in Table 5's correlation matrix. It has been demonstrated that the variables have a significant positive correlation. This association is also statistically ($p = 0.001$) significant. For instance, solid waste expenditures rise along with rising solid waste creation. All other factors showed comparable patterns as well.

Table 5. Correlation between variables

Item	Income	Expenditure	SW expense	SW generation	Family size

Citizens participating in the decision-making processes for SWM?

This research's main goal was to explore the accessibility of low-cost SWM technology, public involvement in SWM decision-making, the existence of local health initiatives, and the presence of environmental awareness campaigns in the city. However, all participants said that their community lacked any low-cost technology that supports SWM. In addition, they all agree that no one has ever made an official decision about how SWM operates.
