ABSTRACT

Background: Postnatal period is the most vulnerable time, because the majority of neonatal and maternal death deaths occur during this period, especially within the first month after birth. In spite of its importance, this period is generally neglected. Objectives: To estimate utilization of postnatal care services and to study the factors associated with utilization of postnatal care among the postnatal mothers of urban slums of Jorhat town. Methods: Community based cross-sectional study was carried out in urban slums of Jorhat town. 94 postnatal mothers, who delivered during the time period of 16th October, 2018 to 15th October, 2019 were included from two randomly selected urban slums. Collected data were analysed using SPSS16. Results: Out of 94 mothers, 24.5% were illiterate, 26.6% were educated up to high school standard and only 6.4% of subjects were graduate. We observed 91.5% of the study subjects availed postnatal check-up (PNC), whereas only 23.4% had complete PNC (≥ 5 PNC) and 8.3% did not have any PNC. Multivariate analysis showed education as a strong predictor (AOR: 1.463, CI: 1.054-2.030) of utilization of postnatal care services. Conclusions: Education was found to be strong predictor in complete utilization of postnatal check-up. Other factors affecting the utilization of complete PNC were adequate birth spacing, primigravida and age at marriage above eighteen years.

Keywords: Postnatal care, utilization, health facility, education, urban slum.

Postnatal care is one of the key strategies for attaining at the targeted maternal mortality ratio of 70 lakh live birth under the objective 3.1 of the Sustainable Development Goal (SDG) by the year 2030¹. Evidence from a previous study reveals that post-natal mortalities accounts for more than 60% of maternal death in developing countries and the United Nation². Medical care during the postnatal period is of utmost important for the survival of both mother and her newborn baby.

World Health Organization defines the postnatal period as "immediately after birth of the baby and extends up to six weeks (42 days) after birth"³. Majority of neonatal and maternal death can be prevented by meticulous monitoring and timely appropriate medical interventions.

The postpartum care should include a physical examination of both mother and baby for timely detection and treatment of complications and diseases, maintaining warm chain, advice about colostrum and exclusive breast feeding, family planning, immunization and maternal nutrition⁴.

World Health Organization technical guidelines of 2013 recommend minimum of three additional postnatal check-ups for all mothers and newborns, on day 3 (48-72 hours), between days 7-14 after birth, and six weeks after birth for hospital delivery⁵. Although the emphasis is placed by the government for the thorough improvement of maternal health care under the concept of "continuum of care" which include adolescence, pre-pregnancy, childbirth and postnatal period, childhood,⁶ a varying degree of reluctance are seen in availing the recommended three post natal care services. The report of NFHS 5 reveals the proportion of mothers receiving post-natal check-up within two days of delivery as
