

Evolution of India's China Policy

JOHN W. GARVER

THINKING THROUGH THE UPHEAVAL, 1949–53

Three trends operating at the international system-level of analysis deeply influenced the China policy of newly independent India. First, the decisive victory of the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) in China's civil war led to the establishment in October 1949 of the People's Republic of China (PRC) as a Leninist–Stalinist style state that effectively united China for the first time in decades. That new Chinese state quickly eliminated the Tibetan buffer that had for centuries separated China and India, thereby destroying a central element of the China policy that independent India inherited from Britain.

Second, the accelerating collapse of the European colonial empires that had organized world power over the previous several centuries led to the entry of growing numbers of newly independent Asian and African nations onto the world stage. The collapse of the Japanese empire that had dominated East Asia and the British empire that had dominated South Asia posed the question of what sort of international order would replace those old imperial systems, or more specifically, what roles newly liberated India and China would play in the emerging post-colonial world.

The third trend was the onset of the Cold War between the Soviet and US-led camps, and the expansion of that Cold War to Asia circa 1950. This raised the prospect that Asia's post-colonial order would be defined by the United States (US)–Soviet struggle, with India's efforts to shape the new Asia free of Western domination being overwhelmed by the battles of the American and Soviet superpowers. From India's perspective, both the US and Russia were essentially Western powers.

The collapse of colonial empires paralleled by the onset of the Cold War presented both opportunities and dangers for India's national policies. India's leaders felt that India was a leader of the 'newly emerging nations'

Forging New Partnerships, Breaching New Frontiers Rejaul Karim Laskar,2022-07-11 The decade 2004-14 when the two United Progressive Alliance (UPA) governments led by prime minister Manmohan Singh were in office was a remarkable milestone in the history of India's diplomacy The period saw a significant transformation in the way India deals with the external world Under the quiet and active leadership of prime minister Manmohan Singh India established important strategic partnerships managed key security challenges carved out a position of influence in core domains of global governance and fostered the economic development and socio political stability of its neighbourhood The ten years of UPA rule has been a crucial passage in the evolution of India's foreign policy and yet this period has been until now curiously understudied This book bridges this puzzling gap in the literature In this book seventeen eminent scholars of international relations drawn from leading universities around the world examine and debate India's diplomacy during this period. This is the first comprehensive assessment of the transformations brought by the UPA governments in India's foreign policy. It offers a wide-ranging analysis of India's bilateral relations and engagements with important geographic regions as well as insight into India's diplomacy on major issue areas such as international trade, nuclear policy, maritime security, energy, and UN Security Council reform.

New Powers Amrita Narlikar, 2010. Being the new kid on the block is seldom easy at any level and it is certainly not easy in the anarchical world of international politics. New powers such as Brazil, China and India have to tread a difficult balance as they negotiate their way to the top. They must signal a sufficient level of conformity to show that they do not pose a threat to the system and thereby avoid preemptive reprisals. But habitually conciliatory diplomacy is likely to lead established powers to regard them as pushovers Effective bargaining holds the key to finding the balance between these extremes Established powers also have no straightforward answers available to them If the aims of the new power are limited then engagement is a worthwhile enterprise But if they are radically revisionist or revolutionary then its disruptive potential to the system may necessitate containment from the established powers Assessing the intentions of new powers and responding appropriately is crucial for the maintenance of international peace and stability The key to such an assessment lies in an analysis of negotiation behaviour which Narlikar examines in the case of the three most important candidates vying for great power status today Brazil China and India Together they present some fascinating commonalities in their diplomacy but also significant differences The range of cases of new powers studied here also allows us some scope for generalization on how new entrants into great power clubs might behave and what strategies the established powers can use most effectively to accommodate their rise
