The Meridian System and Angular Measurement

Angles and distances have had their part in the history of man's knowledge of the universe. The stars of each country, known to be constant in position and other measurements, are in direct evidence of the motions and distances that separate them. A particular illustration of this is the meridian system. The meridian is that path in the heavens which divides the sky into two halves. It is used to measure the time and other celestial data. The stars which lie to the east or west of the meridian are said to be in the eastern or western sky. The stars which lie to the north or south of the meridian are said to be in the northern or southern sky. The stars which lie to the east or west of the meridian are said to be in the eastern or western sky.

1. The Meridian System

To find the time of day or night or to measure the length of the day or night, it is necessary to know the position of the sun in the sky. The meridian system is used to measure the time of day or night. The meridian system is used to measure the length of the day or night.
