

INTRODUCTION TO ASPEN PLUS SIMULATION

What is Process Simulation/Analysis?

The purpose of process simulation is to model and predict the performance of a process. It involves the development of the process into the mathematical elements (e.g. units) and subsequent study of performance. The process identification is e.g. flowsheet, composition, temperature, pressure, production equipment sizes, etc. It can predict the energy analysis, equipment flows, equipment utility requirements, material requirements and integrate sub-processes identified in e.g. ASPEN Plus. In addition, process analysis may involve the use of representative cases to predict and evaluate performance. Therefore, in process simulation, we are given the process flowsheet and description and are required to predict process output (Fig. 1). The tool used here is ASPEN Plus. It is a computer-aided software which uses the underlying physical relationships (e.g., material and energy balances, thermodynamic equations, etc.) together to predict process performance (e.g., stream properties, operating conditions, and requirements).

Fig. 1. Process Simulation Problem.

There are several advantages of computer-aided simulation:

- Allows the designer to quickly test the performance of complex process alternatives and provide feedback to the process synthesis activities.
- Can be incorporated with process synthesis to finding optimum integrated designs.
- Minimizes experimental and scale-up efforts.
- Explains process flexibility and sensitivity by answering "what-if" questions.
- Quantitatively predicts the process and feeds design/operating process performance.

Despite these advantages, there are some limitations involving use of the existing world of computer-aided simulation:

- It is hard to quickly test the strength of R&D alternatives.
- The computational power available on personal computers (PCs) gives the limitation.
- Not all R&D activities provide data that simulated models require physical process information (e.g. unit flowsheet etc.) with its inherent inherent value of the quality of process.
