"Das Temperamentale Problem London im 18ten Jahr"

By David Mervin Long

This chapter in Lafayette's text is important because in the American Revolutionary War, there were specifically references to 1776 and happened at age 23, Lafayette was left with a great internationalist outlook. He only 20 years old, but possessed deep learning following on the knowledge of his family's progressive military history. Two years later, he supported his uncle and his six friends including including Marie Antoinette's execution in 1793, in relation of the King.

Over 100, despite his uncle and high ranking in France's military, Lafayette was not present. During a stay in Paris, he learned of the American soldiers' needs against the British. He began to attend and participate in meetings for political (philosophical) matters, with other intellectuals who sympathized with the colonies and their quest of independence. He was also exposed to the French Revolution, which was in its early stages, about the ideas of revolution and setting up a republic.

In these meetings, European intellectuals, scientists and philosophers discussed the rights of man, the abolition of slavery, and the principles of the American movement, emphasizing the importance of equality and liberty. These principles were heavily influenced by the Enlightenment's progressivism, centered on the enlightenment's core American Revolution that Enlightenment thinkers stressed liberty, equality, and individualism. They challenged ideas rooted in tradition and religion, such as superstitions, authoritarianism, and privilege. Instead they suggested religion through individual study and practical methods. Among their philosophies was the idea that citizens should be provided equality and individual freedoms.

In America, Progress was a necessity, which means a stronger government/country.
